

CUSD Libraries Spotlight Literary Contributions in Celebration of Black History Month

Hats off to our school librarians who curated displays of books about important people, places, and stories highlighting Black History during the month of February. Thought-provoking and creative displays helped students easily browse and access books for both research and leisure.

During daily library

classes, elementary students read books about Black History that had been nominated for California Young Readers awards. Throughout the month, students accessed selected resources to learn and present on the experiences, accomplishments, and contributions of African-Americans. At the secondary level, our librarians highlighted resources for student research and materials for essays and projects.

CUSD teachers work in collaboration with our librarians to design thematic units of study. Our librarians identify and pull poetry, fiction, and nonfiction texts and primary source documents which align to the subject and grade level. Literacy is a key focus area in CUSD, and our district librarians play a vital role in supporting learning across the curriculum through collaboration with teachers to provide resources for students.
